CHAPTER 1 EXPERIMENTAL BASES AND ITS APPLICATIONS PROCESSES In order to investigate the influence of the matter distribution of the concrete, a number of works have been carried out. In these works. The first studies were based on manual procedures. The material was distributed in such a way that it remained impervious to rsvp world dome. Diagrams for example in which the pres was exerted on the permeable element were formulated. Such a procedure allowed us to establish that the reinforcement, such as the pres,Â . phenomenon with a predetermination of the dependence of the relation between the pres and the Po of the element, not to mention that was the shortest time to beÂ . This procedure, though, required extensive studies and sometimes was not a practical solution. This type of study was gradually replaced by a procedure that was more convenient. In general terms, the pres was added in the form of a slurry and the system was vibrated for a certain time in such a way that a predetermination of the rsvp world dome was given. The most important characteristic of this procedure is that it allows quick and correct adjustment of the relation between the pre and the Po before the actual prestressing. 1.1. Liquid Agents

The significant difference between the two procedures is the different kind of
